

Newsweek recognizes Invesco on America's Most Responsible Companies 2021 list

Invesco was named one of America's Most Responsible Companies by Newsweek magazine for the second year in a row. The list recognizes the top 400 most responsible companies in the United States, spanning 14 industries.

Invesco ranked No. 147 out of the top 400 companies recognized for their corporate responsibility performance. The rating, prepared in partnership with global data research firm Statista, is determined by evaluating the key corporate responsibility performance indicators of more than 2,000 companies across the country in the areas of environmental, social and corporate governance (ESG) performance.

"Our commitment to corporate social responsibility is fully aligned with our Purpose—delivering an investment experience that helps people get more out of life," said Martin L. Flanagan, President and CEO of Invesco. "Although we've had to quickly adapt in the wake of COVID-19, we have been steadfast in our focus areas of fostering a diverse and inclusive culture, making responsible investments that align with the long-term interests of our clients and ensuring sustainable operations and strong governance."

America's Most Responsible Companies were selected based on publicly available key performance indicators derived from corporate responsibility reports as well as an independent survey. The key performance indicators focused on company performance in the environmental, social and corporate governance areas, while the independent survey asked more than 7,500 U.S. citizens about their perception of company activities related to corporate responsibility.

To view the complete list of America's Most Responsibility Companies, visit <https://www.newsweek.com/americas-most-responsible-companies-2021>.